Bambi to slip behind Iron Curtain

University to send stripper to CSSR

By NON WANTON
Jurinal staff writer

Students at the University of Alberta are spending $20 thousand to send a stripper to Czechoslovakia.

The all-expenses-paid excursion being financed by the Students' Union is officially intended to promote the SU's public relations.

"The SU suffers from a poor worldly image," said Dave Oginski, SU president, "and we thought this was a great way of promoting ourselves — inexpensive too."

Bambi left for the eastern bloc country this morning. Her mother had to rush out to the airport minutes before the plane left as Bambi had forgotten a piece of apparel. "Oops!" she said.

The Young Communists believe the SU had ulterior motives for sending a voluptuous broad to the grey boring country.

"It's an undercover intelligence mission," said their spokesman Glib Butcher.

Oginski laughed uproariously at the suggestion. "Intelligence?" he questioned. "What would we want with intelligence?"

Other members of Students' Council agreed with Oginski, noting that intelligence would be of little use in their forum.

According to Oginski, the $20 thousand is a maximum figure and includes airfare, accommodation, and long distance charges to ships in the mid-Atlantic.

Mulroney pulls a boner

OTTAWA — Opposition MP's continued to call for the resignation of Prime Minister Brian Mulroney today in the scandal that is slowly developing over alleged patronage appointments.

The Sudbury Globe and Mail last week reported that Mulroney had assured his brother-in-law Roc LaManche a top posting at the new federal penitentiary that will open in Quebec.

The Sudbury daily also claimed that Mulroney and LaManche had this discussion in a seedy strip bar in Montreal called Le Boob Show.

The only evidence available shows a man leaving Le Boob Show with a bar towel over his head, getting into a waiting limousine.

Mulroney has yet to comment on the affair. LaManche, however, admits that he had a "few beers" with the prime minister at Le Boob Show.

"What's wrong with that?" he said. "It's the way things are done here in Quebec."

Le Boob Show management claims that Quebec MP's often frequent the bar for a few pints and a "coup d'oeil."

Mulroney has taken an unannounced vacation for three weeks, leaving his deputy to run the government until the storm subsides.

Oral throws Beef-a-roni dinner for God

By JEFF FLOSS
Jurinal staff writer

Evangelist Oral Roberts announced that God had spoken to him from a can of Beef-a-roni yesterday, in order to congratulate him.

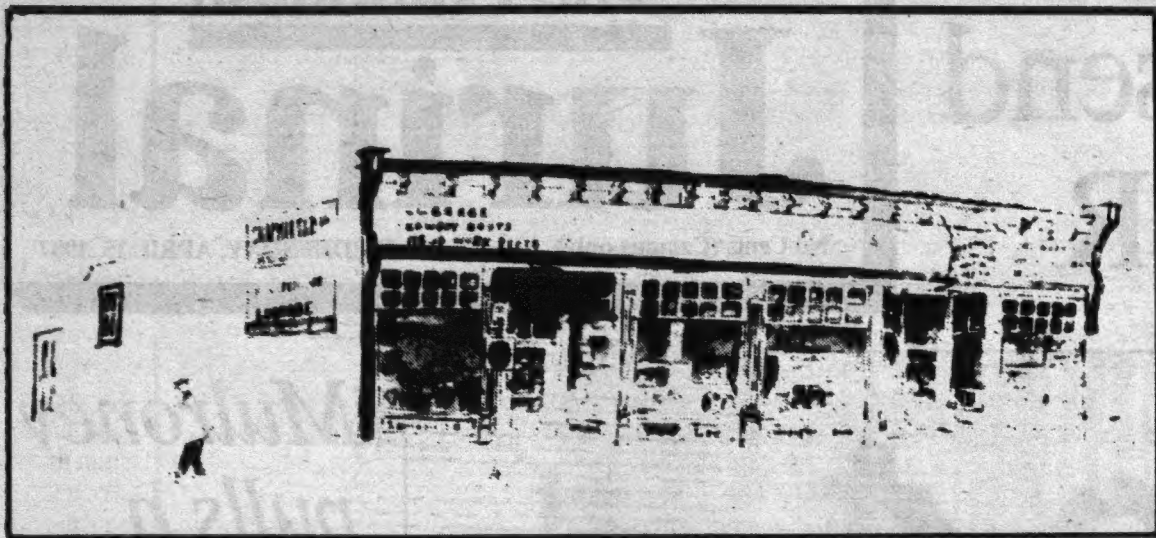

"He told me he was glad He didn't have to call me home after all," declared the beaming Roberts, who had said God told him earlier he would die if he did not raise $8 million by the end of March, "then He shook my hand and gave me a plaque."

Roberts plans to hold a $500-a-plate Thank God dinner where he will dish out the sole course from the Beef-a-roni can.

"And I don't want anyone asking, 'Where's the beef?'" said Roberts. People attending the dinner will be given an opportunity to put the empty can to their ears. "If they don't pick up the Voice of God," continued Roberts, "they'll at least pick up PTL."

PTL is a television show broadcast daily, and stands for Praise The Lord, People That Care, and Pass The Loot.

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A prominent Washington resident was murdered yesterday as he left his downtown Washington home. Ronald Reagan, 78, was well known in Washington circles for starring in the movie Bedtime for Bonzo as well as making a historic deal with the U.S.'s estranged ally, Iran. Police are still investigating the homicide.

Carnivorous blob killed at University

David Suzuki, noted scientist, will speak at the Jubilee Auditorium next month on the topic of Why large herbivores will become extinct along with the Tories.

Staffer is surprised by feeding beast

By GREG HOWAREYA
Journal staff writer

A member of the U of A janitorial staff had a harrowing experience yesterday when she discovered a carnivorous blob consuming a biology lab sample.

Eva Kapustich, 42, entered the lab about midnight in the university's Biological Sciences Building. She was doing her routine cleaning when from the far corner of the lab she discerned a loud slurping sound.

Eva investigated and came upon a fibrillating, gelatin-like blob that was in the process of ingesting a preserved baby shark.

"Det ting just et det feesh like was no tomorrow," commented an excited Mrs. Kapustich.

Startled, Eva poked at the blob with her broom handle. Suddenly a streamer of goo was upon her hand and began gnawing at Eva's yellow nail polish.

The adroit Mrs. Kapustich instinctively took the cigarette she was smoking out of her mouth and burned the blob with the hot, cherry-red end. The blob, loaded with formaldehyde, burnt quickly into harmless vapors.

"He went poof like bad perogy in pot," said the heroic Mrs. Kapustich.

Full protection from all-body condom

By JIHAD BRONSON
Journal staff writer

A Millwoods man has just invented and patented what he calls "the saviour of promiscuous people everywhere."

Tater Wormezian said he decided to design the full-body con-dom, an idea lingering in the back of his head for years, in the wake of the recent AIDS epidemic. "It's the only way to be totally safe," he said.

The condom, a large latex contraption vaguely resembling a thin diver's suit, is designed to come in one size which fits all. It is thoughtfully provided with a snorkel.

"I expect to begin manufacturing Gheiks (as they are to be marketed) within the next six months," said Wormezian.

They are to come in four exciting colours and will cost approximately $139.00 for a convenient crate of three.

There are still bugs to be ironed out, however. "I still can't make them compact enough to fit in the average 16 year old's wallet," said Wormezian.

God gives ultimatum, V.P.'s life on line over tuition fees

By NON WANTON
Journal Staff Writer

God is definitely on a rampage. Mike Hunter, vice president of the Students' Union at the U of A, declared today that God would kill him if tuition fees went up.

"Looks like I'm in real trouble with this one," said Hunter, "the Board of Governors put fees up the full ten per cent last week."

According to Hunter, God has given him until September to get the Board to reverse their decision.

Myer Horowitz, president of the U of A, apologetically said "so long, Mike."

Hunter plans to lock himself in his basement until September and pray for lower tuition fees.

CRTC may have established a clear direction, but maybe not . . .

The recent decision of the Canadian Radio, Television and Telecommunications Commission (CRTC) to renew, with serious reservation, the broadcasting license of the CTV (Corporate Type Video) Television Network may, in the view of many, possibly been a mistake.

The perceived lack of Canadian identity alledged by some in CTV programming concerns all Canadians concerned with Canadian culture and related socio-politico-economic ramifications relative to the deep, but sovereign working terms we have established with our American network friends.

In mandating that the CTV maintain and promote, within the limited jurisdiction fiscal realities impose upon a private corporation — but one which must act as a custodian of the public good, that substantive efforts be made to upgrade Canadian drama content, the CRTC may indeed have made a bold undertaking.

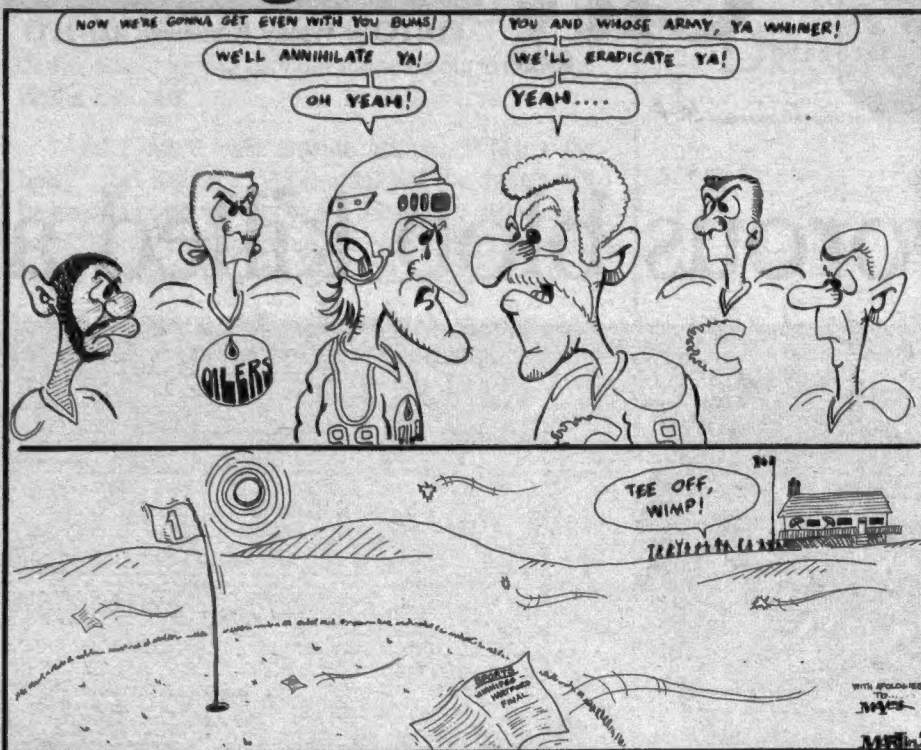

In the spirit of a mixed economy, in which private and public sectors peacefully co-exist, the CRTC recognition that the CCBC (Central Canada Broadcasting Corporation) cannot solely carry the diverse interests which meld into a tolerant and understanding Canada deserves further study, taking into account the various Federal/Provincial concerns, and also respecting the heritage of our Native Canadians.

The balancing of twin concerns, while opposing the undermining of our national sovereignty, thus has been resolved in the minds of many — while opposition still remains.

We at the Jurinal commend the CRTC, while expressing strong reservations, for the strong stand taken by the public watchdog over our airwaves. Much additional work and study must be done, but a clear direction has been established.

It's the revenge of Pierre Elliot Trudeau. I hate to say I told you so, but I did, so I will.

Trans-Canada Pipeline (TCPL) is buying out Dome Petroleum if they are given enough money. The tax breaks which Dome get now are an integral part of the deal you see.

Of course, the federal government will be only too happy to give money to TCPL. It will boost their sagging image in the West. After David Kilgour's little outburst, they need all the help they can get. Brian Mulroney, tired of taking it on the chin, knows this only too well. Pierre and the boys brought in the PGRT, which is what put Dome into trouble in the first place.

The whole thing is a plot by the Liberals of course. Trudeau and Jean Cretien had it all figured out a long time ago, you see. They had everything figured out. They're a lot smarter than the rest of us.

I told you so. I knew they were too smart, because they are all taller than I am.

Hey, wait a minute, everybody's taller than I am. Everybody except David Crombie. He's real short. What a nice guy. I really like him. Joe Clark's pretty short, or nice, too.

To think I've been a closet Liberal for all these years, and the Tories are a lot shorter than the Grits.

So you see, we have to beware of tall people like Trudeau because they are mean and devious and stuff. I hate 'em. Vote for Herve Villechaise. Or maybe me — I'd make a great Prime Minister. I have all the qualifications: I'm short and loveable, and screaming funny.

That's it, vote for me! Prime Minister Footinthemouth! No, that would never work. With a title like that, everybody would call me Mr. Mulroney.

Limber Gullett

You're all a bunch of ignorant louts!!!

The recent Reagan/Mulroney acid rain "talks" were a blatant exercise in futility. Between the perfect plastic "smile-for-the-camera" faces and the vague, public doublespeak, the Canadian public was once again fooled by the fluff.

Mulroney went into the meetings having promised the voters he would get a commitment to action against acid rain out of Reagan. What he got from the president was a promise for next year that had been promised last year for this year.

Both bureaucrats had the nerve to come out of the talks and call this step backwards substantial progress. The public nodded and clapped and went on with their mundane lives with the faith that their leaders were going to take care of them.

None of this surprises me.

First of all, I never did expect a Tory to poke his head up from the corruption and political favors to concern himself with a real issue of importance. All they really care about are their parties and money and businesses — screw the little guy.

Besides that, the Canadian government is a puppet for the Americans. They go into these international meetings, do their political mating dance, and come out knowing those money-grabbing bullies across the border will take care of us as long as we don't step on their toes. What a bunch of jerks.

Of course the public is too stupid to realize they are being taken for a ride. They wouldn't understand politics if they were slapped across the face with Hansard.

The education system is to blame for all the idiots out there. Teachers are either burned out or couldn't teach in the first place, and students are too busy smoking drugs and getting pregnant to care.

Parents have lost control of today's youth. Instead of guiding their children and creating a bright future for our country, they are trying to make ends meet.

Social assistance has been cut to the bone while the government boosts business and industry. Families don't have time to be families anymore.

What this all comes down to is society has failed. Get out while you can, move back to your grass huts, overturn the government, save yourselves!

Skylab is falling! Skylab is falling!

My three sons have been running a productive business with all of the many tips provided in The Jurinal, and are on the verge of signing their fourth corporate sponsor in Exxon.

It is in these types of stories that The Jurinal truly serves the community at large, serving everyone from the average citizen (who now can get a refreshing glass of grape Kool Aid with NO MONEY DOWN), to the business man. My sons now pay 300% higher protection fees with their thriving new stand, which filters back into the community in the form of loans, jobs, and services.

Modern play the Centre of Gravity falls on its face

The Centre of Gravity
 fortress theatre

review by Sour Pickles
 JURNAL STAFF WRITER

It's so hard to find a good play nowadays. Especially when it's February in Edmonton, when we need good plays most.

And oh! how this city needs a dose of really good the-at-ter. Some really experimental, ultra-pretentious stuff.

But look what the Fortress Theatre does whenever it tries to do something different. It falls flat on its face. FLAT ON ITS NOSE!

I just hate seeing plays like this, but I sure love bitching about them.

So bitch, bitch, bitch, I will, and you can't stop me! And I don't care about you actors who need this play to keep running, or those of you ordinary people who still want to see it, because I already saw it on my freebie passes, and I really don't care!

Anyway, the play is called The Centre of Gravity by Tyler Artiste, and it's about a group of young people trying to find it.

There is a lot of interesting blocking in this play: people climbing onto chairs, crawling up the walls, and fighting with pipecleaners, but on the whole it was very dull.

The play itself is rather strange. Nothing is motivated. Why the characters are complaining about a lack of gravity when they each have two feet firmly on the ground is never explained. I suppose it had something to do with the Meaning of Life, something allegorical, but I'm not going to figure it out.

The acting is energetic, but rather stagey and theatrical. I personally could not identify with their youthful angst. At times it was difficult to understand what they were saying because they were either shouting or whispering.

Symbolism went rank in this ultra-modern play. There were a few songs, accompanied by lutes. Badly sung.

Anyway, as the story goes, the people are trapped in an abandoned house while nuclear war is raging all around them. Somehow, through the magic of the group's leader Joseph (played by Yves Montagne), the house is untouched. But the radiation deprives them of gravity, and the house becomes a prison.

This is all difficult to represent onstage, and they were idiots to experiment with it.

What about a return to the old plays: Shakespeare, Moliere, Dryden? None of this pretentious garbage that our modern age has produced. I say let's get some real plays going in this city that dares to call itself a theatre centre.

Boring, pretentious, pointless, pseudo-symbolic, flat:

The angst of losing one's centre of gravity is explored in pretentious, confusing play.

Pogo Stick bouncing around in the Canadian music scene

Interview by Hellon Metal
 JURNAL STAFF WRITER

Last week, the Edmonton Journal sent well-known rock fan Hellon Metal out to interview Jean-Herman Groulx and Pete Tung from the hot new Canadian band Pogo Stick Uv Luv. This is what she came back with.

HM: Well fellas, suppose you tell me what it's like to be on top of the charts with your first single We Luv U.

PT: (In thick English accent.) It's great.

J-H: Of course it's not our first single, it's only our first song with this band. We had Uuu, I'm In Luv With U when we were with Leaning Tower Uv Luv in '84. It went to 37 in Toronto and all the way to 29 in Dartmouth and Regina.

HM: What made you decide to quit Leaning Tower and start Pogo Stick?

J-H: We had a disagreement with the bongo player and he owned the rights to the name, so the rest of the band quit and started Pogo Stick without him. Me and Pete bought a bongo machine together instead.

PT: Yeah, an' it's great, too.

HM: So how many of you in Pogo Stick?

J-H: Me and Pete.

PT: An' the bongo machine.

J-H: We call the bongo machine Ringo, 'cause our last bongo player was just like Pete Best, who used to be the Beatles' drummer.

PT: 'Course Ringo used to be the Beatles' drummer too now.

J-H: But at any rate, we're better off without him. He ate too much, and the bongo machine can play better bongos.

PT: Yeah, it's great.

HM: So that's all you use the drum machine for, is bongos?

J-H: That's all it does I think. At the store we told them we wanted it set for bongos and they did, so that's all it does now I guess.

PT: Yeah, an' it works great.

HM: You're a Canadian band according to your press kit, but Pete has the heaviest accent I've ever heard. When did you come to this country?

PT: Oh, I was born here. Pedawawa, Ontario. My dad was in the forces. Both our dads were. We met in Comox.

HM: Why the accent?

PT: I like it. It makes me sound like Mick. It's great, eh?

J-H: We both like Mick a lot. I dance just like him on stage — I hop around and flail my arms a lot.

PT: An' I dance like Peter Wolf from used-to-be-J. Geils.

HM: That sounds interesting. Do you tour a lot?

PT: Yeah, it's great.

J-H: I hate it — the drunks and hotels and stuff are ok, but I get real nervous onstage and sweat a lot, and my make-up runs and it tastes awful.

PT: Yeah, and not enough groupies. I mean we're already at number 17 on Muchmuzzak, and there aren't any chicks. It sucks.

J-H: Hey! You're a chick! Wanna come up to our hotel room and see our bongo machine Ringo?

PT: Yeah, it's a great bongo machine.

HM: Maybe later. It sounds like you guys are pretty heavily influenced by traditional rockers like the Stones and J. Geils.

J-H: Definitely. On our album we're going to do Wild Thing by Hendrix, you know? Except I'm going to play the lead on my electric fiddle, and Pete will play the bass parts on synthesizer.

PT: An' Ringo plays the bongo part. It's great, you should hear it.

HM: I can't wait. Any other influences?

J-H: Adam Ant.

PT: Great costumes.

HM: Any last words from the band for your fans?

J-H: Buy lots of stuff, and our EP I Luv Uv Luv Your Tung is out, and we'll be in Calgary on the third.

HM: But I'm from the Edmonton Journal.

PT: Edmonton? That's just outside of Griesbach isn't it?

J-H: Well anyways, that doesn't matter. Just come to our show and buy our t-shirts and stuff.

PT: Yeah, rock on. Party hearty, y'know? Great, it's great. Wanna come to our room now?

J-H: We got beer an' stuff.

HM: Can I meet Ringo?

At this point Ms. Metal ran out of tape.

Commie Killer's American revenge against KGB is real Dull

Commie Killer: Defender of Freedom
 10 stars

by BARK SPORTON
 JURNAL STAFF WRITER

Anybody going to see Commie Killer: Defender of Freedom, expecting to see a high-quality film like Rambo, is going to be disappointed.

I know I was.

Real disappointed. I expected the director of American Avenger to have done a better job than this.

The plot is real obvious, and real dull, because it's real obvious.

It starts with these two guys. They are assigned by the CIA and the FBA to kill big-wheel porno king Guido Gangolotta, who has sold out to the KGB and is going to give away all their secrets.

Needless to say, the Mafia gets involved in this. I hardly need to say. So these two guys who speak in grunts are going after this big guy in Moscow. But they're being followed by this other hunky guy who's Russian and from the KGB, who's onto the two guys.

Oh yeah, the two good/American guys' names are Jimbo and Joe, played by two guys who look like a cross between Sly Stallone and Charles Bronson. I forget their names. The KGB hunk/bad guy is called Boris Bolshevik and he looks like a cross between

Standing alone, the American takes on the mafia and the KGB — and wins

Arnold Schwarzenegger and Rutger Hauer.

I hardly need mention that the KGB guy has a real gorgeous girl working with him too. She's played by a girl with a long Russian name who doesn't really look like anyone, but maybe like Janet from Three's Company if you squint up your eyes.

It's real obvious to see how this girl, Lena, manages to seduce at least one of the American joes, Joe, and that's when the trouble starts.

Of course.

The plot goes on from there.

Lots of fast car chases and a bloody murder in (appropriately) the Red Square in Moscow, were the highlights.

Although, personally, the sex scenes didn't turn me on.

You're just beginning to get real bored with all the shoot-em-down scenes and the blood and guts when the Mafia steps in.

The Mafia kingpin, big-wheel chief Guiseppe Fellatio steps in and kills one of the American guys. The other American guy therefore swears revenge and vengeance on the Mafia. And the KGB.

So he takes them both on all alone, head-on, solo.

And wins.

This is all real obvious.

And dull.

Dumb.

Everything is really confused for a while until order comes with the American Marines who restore order. They take over Russia and the last scene shows Russian peasants waving — guess what?! — American flags.

This is all real obvious, and predictable.

The acting is real bad. So is the directing. The cinematography is real bad too. It's just all really bad.

On a scale between Death Without Dishonour and Rambo II, I would place this film between Red Dawn and Bears Versus Eagles.

So much for that.

The Joey Cairo band . . . Joey and the boys get down

Joey Cairo: King of Parody

Joey Cairo
Cairomania

Record review by Cram Oanis

Joey Cairo has finally released his second LP, "Cairomania." The reason for the wait was because of a last minute addition to "Pukin' in the Boys' Room," which is now a duet with Joe's long time pal, Marc Belhumeur. (Watch for his solo LP, "I'll Drop Ya!") Joe has definitely established himself as the king of song parodies. The title track makes you even wonder why Def Leppard bothered, however, the two destined to be classic cuts are "Wake Me Up Before I Throw Up" (Wham!) and "Rock Me Joey Cairo" (Falco). What style, what pizzazz. Much of the album is concerned with Joe's most sensitive part of his body — his nose. On "I Want a New Nose," Joe sings, "I want a new nose/one that's not too long/one that will make these guys/stop writing these stupid songs." What pain this artist feels! Joey Cairo is the king.

Also planning a debut in show business is Bakker's short-time ex-lover, Jessica Hahn. Hahn admits freely that she is capitalizing on her famous tryst with the TV evangelist: "Everyone is world famous for 15 minutes, so I'm pushing my 15 minutes with Jim just as far as they will go."

Liz to wed again

Liz Taylor gets married again! "Frederico will be my last hubby," says she, smiling shyly, lipstick on her teeth. "I think nine is enough, don't you?" Frederico de Mucos Mula is the heir of an 800 million hotel chain in Europe, the "Spumante Bambino" hotels. He is also famous for having once been a boyfriend of Princess Stephanie. "Money," states Liz firmly, twisting a multi-diamond ring, "has nothing to do with my attraction to Fred. I believe in good Christian values, just like Jimmy Bakker."

On hearing that Liz Taylor is getting married once again, Joan Collins remarked: "Good Lord! Will that aged nymphomaniac ever settle down?"

Hard times hit Mr. Rogers . . .

University cutbacks cost Mr. Ed Rogers his job. The former Dean of the now defunct Fac. of Business now siphons gas to pay for his Nibs.

Guido: former student settles into business.

Guido & Co: Spreading 'love' through community

by SUZANNE LAUNDROMAT
Neighbors Reporter

Guido is part of a vanishing species — a civic merchant with a heart.

Although you would have to look pretty hard to find a person who works harder for his community, Guido describes his profession as a labor of love — literally.

"I see myself as being in the 'love and comfort' business," he smiled. "I help the lonely, the depressed, those from out of town."

Guido hit the streets a scant one year ago and the progress he has made is a tribute to hard work, hustle, and street smarts. He now has five employees "working at the street level" he says. And they could not be happier about their boss.

"He's great," says Candy (not her real name). "Like before he came we didn't have union benefits, holiday pay, (sound of gum smacking) or a pension plan. Nothin'."

For his philanthropy Guido now grosses close to 250 G's per annum, a far cry from 1985 when he was a poor second-year business student at the University of Alberta. He left because he couldn't handle what he describes as the "Ivory Tower mentality" of academe.

"I couldn't stand it (school)," he winces. "You know a student is there to learn to improve his mind. They should be encouraging students to experiment, try new things, not put you on probation the minute you hit a rocky stretch of river. I had to get out."

The university's loss was Jasper Avenue's gain as Guido has taken it upon himself to bolster Edmonton's sagging tourist trade.

"We're tryin' real hard," he says. "Two for one specials. Coupons in the Jurnal and Sun. Draws for free trips to Hawaii. Prizes for the one millionth customer. All that stuff."

Guido is upset because he feels the community is not behind him on this. "Well, heck, now they're passing laws to arrest and detain the customers for just talking to my staff. Jeez, that's like kicking a customer out of a fancy restaurant because he wants to read the menu. I don't know. I'm really disillusioned. Hey, guys, it's a team effort."

Guido also sidelines as a "financial consultant," making small loans to enterprising young international import/export companies. "I make loans to people you don't normally see at the bank," he explains.

"I really love helping out people — it's a great way to get to know folks — especially their families," he said with a smile, gently fondling his favorite sledgehammer.

The recent economic downturn,

Candy and Guido are a couple of hard-nosed professionals with a great concern for the welfare of the community.

however, has taken its toll on Guido's business. "People take longer to pay back now — but I'm a nice guy, I let people pay over time. I've got a bunch of guys who have been making payments for years."

Guido not only makes money for the community, he pours it back into the community. "I've already installed five heated lampposts down Jasper, making them more comfortable to lean against in winter months. And Harry's Love Shoppe will be adding on a Sodom and Gomorrah wing next month with money from a grant from the Guido foundation."

Guido has had to put up with a lot to see his one-man crusade come to fruition. He mentions the harassment tactics of local law enforcement slime and points nonchalantly to a six-inch vertical scar running down the left side of his rib cage. "This was a gift from someone less civic-minded than myself," he says of the scar. "But," he sighs, "as in any human endeavor you'll find those who are in it only for themselves."

Guido is enjoying himself immensely, but does not see his current position lasting in perpetuity. "I'm saving enough money to go back to school," he says. "I think I want to get into corporate law."

Europeans
are wimps

The rumor mill continues to churn out tales regarding the apparently late second period goal that stood up as the winner in Game 2 of the Winnipeg-Calgary series. Word is that Jets G.M. John Ferguson had warned the goal judge (83 year old R.A. Charles) to make sure anything close is a goal. That prompted CBC analyst Don Cherry to quip "Had to be one of them wimpy Europeans. Probably Inge Hammerstrom or Hannu Kampuri."

Out of Vancouver, the Canucks are continuing their search for defensive help and this week were trying to work out a deal with Tony Pena. "I hear he's got great defensive skills," says G.M. Mighty Quinn. "No one mentioned baseball to me."

Mark Messier of the Oilers has ironed out an endorsement deal with Macco Autobody for the next two years. "I expect Mark to use our services quite a bit in those couple of years; he has been one of our best customers," says Guido Sharp, Macco's Edmonton manager.

In a move to stamp out party-related problems, the N.H.L. will no longer allow businesses to distribute freebies to players and management. Glen Sather growled about the ruling: "If (Ken) Linseman was still here I might agree with it, but since he's gone I haven't seen a girl near the dressing room."

And it's not just the escort agencies that have the coaches concerned — no free suds either. "As a coach I have lots of free time. I enjoy drinking all the promo beer then," boasts Bob Johnson, Calgary coach. "Does this mean we have to return those Patty Stackers we got?" asked Chris Nilan of Montreal. "I'm willing to pay for mine."

Buffalo rearguard Lee Fogolin, who worked on some T.V. advertisements while in Edmonton, just finished shooting a series of commercials for Mr. Hair-style. "They wanted somebody with a perfectly monotone voice and a great head of hair," said Fogey. "But they settled for me. They said I had the locks for the job, heh heh."

Paul McLean and Lanny McDonald have started a new youth awareness campaign which will air over the summer. It's called "Say NO To Facial Hair."

Shark shits as sharp shot sinks

Australian golfer Greg Norman has lost another major golf tournament on a miracle shot.

On the third playoff hole, the 178-yard 16th, Wang Chung Wokkingbank hit a hole-in-one after Norman dropped his tee shot five feet from the hole.

It was a $160,000 shot for Wokkingbank, while Norman only got $96,000 for yet another in a series of second place finishes.

It was the beginning of a bad week for Norman, who had his flight to Australia delayed for four hours due to a fake hijacking by an escaped member of a nearby mental institution.

When he finally got Down Under, his

The Hockey Night In Canada network announced yesterday that they have found a replacement for deposed host Dave Hodge. After scouring the country for a media personality with enough charm to be able to explain early exits from important games, and the right amount of sheer wit to perform as Don Cherry's straight man, mother-corp settled on Brent Kane of CJSR.

Kane, who has held the managerial reigns at CJSR for seemingly years, will begin working on the HNIC set when the second round of the playoffs begin on April 21st.

Said Hodge from his home in Vancouver, "It all seems so clear to me now. It's just like Quinn-gate — they were going to hire him all along. It's no wonder I was considered so expendable."

When one closely examines the scenario, Hodge's claims appear to be more than just sour grapes. Kane, 25, grew up in Los Angeles, where as a mere tot of two years he could be seen talking into his soother as if it were a microphone and interviewing the other children. After years of training he finally reached the pinnacle of North American broadcasting as Station Manager of CJSR, the campus radio station at the University of Alberta.

"How can I compete?" queries Hodge, himself a mere veteran of 15 years at HNIC. "I saw him on the news last night. They gave him my blue sports coat! My coat . . . I can't believe it."

When reached for comment, Kane had little to say: "Who does that guy think he is anyway? Notre Dame?"

Dick Irvin, the long time HNIC play-by-play man who basically calls the shots around the set, welcomed a man of Kane's prestige and experience luggage was actually sent to Melbourne, North Dakota, instead of Melbourne, Australia.

After getting that re-routed, his car broke down in the middle of the Outback where he had to spend the night among the crocodiles.

"I was so mad about that day that when these crocs came, they didn't know what hit them," Norman said.

After getting his car fixed, he took it to the car wash, which broke down trapping his car inside.

"This day has been more frustrating than going shark fishing," a distraught Norman was heard saying.

CJSR magnate goes to HNIC for Hodge

Kane got out of this hold . . . from the outhouse to the penthouse in one year to the set. "We'll be the best team since Don Witman and Scotty Bowman," he said. "Grapes will be so happy. Who knows, maybe there's some way we can get 1070 Gold to help us out. You know, maybe exclusive radio rights or something!"

Former

bout

Right Bitter News Service

Former world heavyweight champion Joe Louis will come out of retirement and the grave to take on current WBC heavyweight champion Mike Tyson next month.

At a late night press seance Louis revealed his reasons why he wanted to retake the heavyweight title. "What with Leonard beating Hagler and George Foreman making a comeback, I think I can be just as successful," Louis said through a seer.

"I don't have to worry about dying in the ring, at least."

"Everyone says he looks like me, fights like me," Louis said. "I'll hit him so hard that he'll be visiting me to learn about boxing."

Also on hand at the seance was his trainer Apollo Creed. "I've been whippin' him into shape just the way I did for Rocky Balboa when he fought Clubber Lang," said Creed, who is planning a comeback of his own.

"If I don't succeed with my comeback or with training Joe," Creed said, "I'll probably get into Shakespearean acting or something like that."

Louis also commented that he has been working for two years towards a successful return to the ring. "There's no shortage of stiffes here for sparring partners," Louis said, adding that John L. Sullivan, Jack Dempsey, and Gentleman Jim Corbett would all be in his entourage at ringside.

Although he was probably the greatest heavyweight champion ever, there are some detractors who think that the Brown Bomber is foolish.

"I think he will be a ghost of his former self," said NBC fight analyst Dr. Ferdie Pacheco.

When contacted, the Tyson camp was skeptical of Louis' chances, but did confirm the fight. "Yes, Mike Tyson will take him on," said manager Imere Fordamomie. "It could give a whole new meaning to the term shadow-boxing."

Tyson was cool about the whole thing. "It should be a close fight," he said. "He may be old, but he can't get much slower than Boncrusher Smith was in my last fight."

The fight will take place next month in the parking lot of Caesar's Palace.

Athletics goes big time — violations of up to $20 alleged

In a bizarre press conference on Monday, the Department of Athletics at the U of A announced that it had committed several recruiting violations over the past year and was turning itself in to the CIAU.

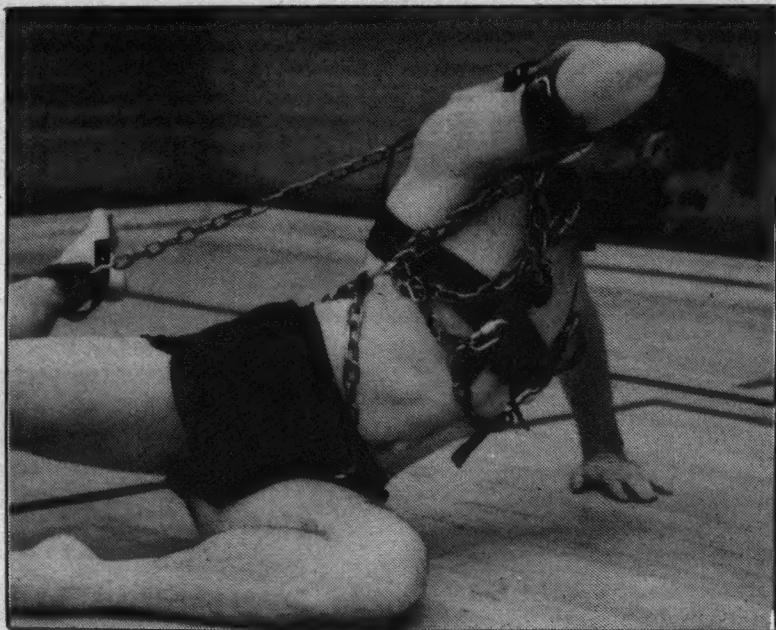

"We feel it's important to come clean on this issue before our alumni and booster clubs really get out of hand," said Athletic Director Bob Steadward. "We've had reports of some payments of up to $20.00 that have been given to our athletes to play here, and I just couldn't live with myself if I let that kind of practice continue."

"It's true," said Rocco Mozzarella, star lineman of the football Bears. "When I was in high school last year, some guy came up to me and said that he would make it worth my while to come here, and right there he slipped me five bucks. Since then I've been receiving $1.00 a month. Sure, I'm ashamed, but now I've been able to buy my mother all the things she's never been able to afford, like spoons and soap."

Upon further investigation, Steadward revealed that half of the football team and all of the men's basketball and hockey teams were receiving illegal payments of at least 50¢ a month.

"A black day for college athletics indeed," he concluded.

An even stranger twist occurred when Steadward actually produced one of the violating boosters for interview. He could only be seen by his silhouette and refused

U of A may be tied up in court for years to use his real name, preferring to go by "Tex."

"Hell, yes, I paid for a few ath-a-letes," said Tex. "Felt I owed it to my ol' alma mater."

Although most reporters wrote this off as another desperate bid for attention by the Athletic Department, Steadward was quick to put those doubts to rest.

"That's an outright lie, and I'd be happy to give you an exclusive interview on that subject," he retorted.

The last word in this so-called "scandal" belongs to the now infamous Tex, who was overheard while relieving himself in the washroom after the press conference, saying, "Course I couldn't have done it if Steddy hadn't given me all that cash... oops, maybe I shouldn't have said that here... Aw, hell. Hey big guy, where's my check!"

Beetle Gt - kick of a dead mule

By SPLAT WINDSHIELD

The 1988 Volkswagon Beetle GT is an automobile that will long stay in the mind of this reporter. With a name such as GT one expects wild acceleration, road thundering revs, and mind-altering cornering. Instead one gets a car that even pedestrians beat off the stop line.

The steering of the car was feeble and unresponsive. The one moment the car achieved satisfactory turning was caused by a sudden cataclysmic draft from a Kenworth. The car spun insanely around, displaying a breathtaking view of the traffic careening madly towards me.

Luckily devoid of cheap spoilers, skirts and tons of excess chrome, the Beetle GT's clean bold looks were a breath of fresh air. Unfortunately the general quality of the car fouled this area immensely. A need for comment upon quality control is shockingly apparent, as I counted 827 errors in this area.

Some of the more apparent shoddy work included the green engine cover on the otherwise blue car, the cluster of rusty nails holding the antenna in place, no back bumper, and lack of substantial reinforcement in the front bumper. By lack of substantial reinforcement, it is meant that this reporter finds electrical tape insufficient inholding a bumper on.

The single fog lamp peering out as might a cyclops if its brains had been kicked out is a quaint touch.

The interior of this vehicle was also a shocking discovery. The passenger seat had two postions on its guide rails - on and off. There was no seat belt for the passenger, nor was ther adequate warning of the danger slamming the doors would cause without initially opening a window. This kind of clears the mind of Monday mornings.

The new 1988 Beetle GT is scheduled to sell for $14,995 and has a lifetime warranty (which it desperately needs). As this goes to press, it has come to my attention that this model has a peculiar habit of blowing up. Apparently the seemingly harmless gasoline heater takes it upon itself to spontaneously combust much to the alarm of both driver and passengers.

It is this reporter opinion that the new Volkswagon Beetle GT, with all the kick of a dead mule, gets thumbs down. I wish to advise all motorists to avoid this car and anyone who might drive one. This vehicle is truly an act of bad taste.
